FOURTEENTH EPISODE

The Unmasking.

A strange mood of happiness, as unreasoning as it was inexplicable, seemed to have taken possession of Margery Golden. A less timorous light shore from the depths of her poolbrown eyes. At all times of the day, too, she could be heard singing about the house.

This wayward blitheness of spirit was something more than a puzzle to her heavy-browed father, who found little in the situation immediately confronting him to cause him any undue lightness of heart. For that situation had unexpectedly taken on the form of a defeat.

After all Jules Legar's campaign for the possession of that pregnant scrap of parchment which carried the key to the secret of the lost treasure of Windward island, the long-fought-for document had suddenly disappeared from the Golden vault. And all evidence pointed to the fact that it was the Laughing Mask who had stolen safe.

second conference with the russetfaced Captain Brackett of the headquarters staff, when a telephone call came for that official. The talk over the wire was one-sided. Then with great deliberation the official hung up the receiver and swung about to Enoch Golden.

"Well, we've got your Laughing Mask for you.'

"You've got him?" repeated Golden. "Our man Walcott located him by trailing his chauffeur. And before nightfall we can have him rounded

"Where was he found?" "Just where you'd least expect a man of that character to be found. He's hiding in a cave in the Hudson Palisades, not ten miles from where we're sitting at the moment, just above Coleman's viliage. And the fact he's ducked to a Malina like that bears out what we've always claimed, that he's as big a crook as this Iron Claw himself. For honest men don't crawl into river caves!" Golden was about to reply in the affirmative to this self-obvious statement when he was interrupted by the entrance of his daughter. "But supposing our fugitive," said the serene-eyed girl as she smiled down on the somewhat startled police captain, "had enemies who seemed at the moment stronger than he was and at the same time found himself in possession of something which it was essential that he should guard? Wouldn't t seem natural for him to go where he'd be least likely to be found?"

The russet-faced captain blinked stolidly up at her.

"When an honest man has something it seems dangerous to hold, he goes to the police for protection. When a crook has made a haul, and is shaky about losing his swag, he beats it to his Malina, to his fence, the same as your friend the Laughing Mask has done! And the sooner we get the wheels moving and root that masked ground-hog out of his dugout the bet-

With a gasp of sudden resolution Margery rang the bell, called for her roadster, and struggled into her hat and coat, as she ran down the sandstone steps to the street.

She sped off through the city at a rate that was an open and obvious violation of all the speed laws. She laughed rebelliously as, once free of the congested ferry traffic, she swung lightly past the car in which she beheld her own astounded father decorously seated, giving him her dust as she mounted to the crest of the Jersey hills and struck the road leading northward along the wide-bosomed river.

Then as she swung past still another hurrying car the smile suddenly died from her face. For she felt sure that one of the faces in that car ward along the topmost ridge of the cliff, heading for the timber not more than a hundred yards away.

But by this time two of the officers, was the face of Jules Legar himself. She went on, from that moment, crowding every inch of speed out of her car, exulting in the fact of its power, ignoring the shouts of onlookers as she swept up through Coleman's village, took the turn in a smother of dust, and brought the steaming roadster up sharp against a cedar-hedge crowning the topmost ridge of the river cliffs. She leaped bodily through the hedge and ran to the outermost lip of the Palisades. There, cupping her hands to her lips, she called out a single name again and again.

From a crevice in the broken rockface below her a figure wearing a yellow mask looked cautiously out and waved up to her with an equally cau- CENT-A-WORD ADS tious signal. The next moment she was clambering nimbly yet carefully down the ledge of broken rock.

A pair of stalwart young arms were waiting to hold her up. But she quickly broke away from their clasp. "Quick, they are coming to capture

They were within six feet of the opening when Legar turned about to give a word or two of command to his followers. Two figures, those of a masked man holding a slender girl firmly by the hand, came running out

So suddenly did they come that they scattered Legar's men as they advanced. And before those astounded men could recover either their footing or their wits, the man in the mask, holding the girl close to his side, had crossed to the cliff-edge and had taken a flying leap out into space.

An involuntary gasp of consternation burst from that startled group of gangsters as they stood watching the clasped figures hurtle through the air, strike the surface of the water clean, and go down into its blue depths. Then, after what seemed an interminable wait, a second shout, as involuntary, apparently, as the first, burst from the watchers as they beheld the two figures reappear, swimming strongly side by side along the St. Asaph Hotel. undulating surface of the water. But Legar fought, backed close against the rock, with the ferocity of a wildcat, holding off every attack and with his flailing iron claw sweeping back every assailant. Then, swinging about, he leaped up the cliff-face, springing from rock to rock with the agility of a mountain goat.

At the top of the cliff, when Enoch Golden himself, side by side with the police captain, attempted to bar that flight, the fugitive bowled over those two rotund figures and bolted north of the fugitive and started in pursuit They ran well, and they ran determinedly. Legar, realizing that they were gaining on him, and further realizing that he could not keep up his gait for long, veered suddenly towards the river, where a road-builder's tool shed stood at the extreme end of a rock-cut along the cliff-top. Through the doorway of this shed he darted, Running to the far end of the shack, he sent his wooden arm crashing through the window, leaped to the sill, and stared out. Below him lay the Hudson. Crouching low, he leaped from the sill where he stood, leaped out into space and then dropped like a plummet to the river below.

"We've lost him!" gasped the foremost of the pursuers, crossing to the shack and staring breathless through the shattered window sash.

"He's done for!" cried the second man. "No guy can take that drop and -By God, we're wrong! He's up! He's striking out for shore!' The oldest of the three suddenly ran

He stood watching her as she crossed to the heavy safe door and swung it shut. He saw her gloved hand go up to the nickeled handle, to throw on the lock. Then she did a startling and unexpected thing. With an oddly birdlike movement of the head she stopped and stared intently at his figure, clearly outlined against the dark folds of the portiere behind him. Then, instead of locking the vault door, she took four quick steps to the heavily carved teakwood table on her right. From this she caught up a Roman lamp of heavy bronze, hurling it with all her force at the swaying portiere behind him at the same moment that she uttered her sudden scream of warning.

And as he advanced on them he tossed the knife away and drew a revolver from his pocket.

But the man in the mask, moving even more quickly than his enemy, swung the girl about and half carried and half dragged her back to the vault, where with one tug of his free hand he sprung the heavy steel door half open. Legar fired, as he did so, but the shot ricocheted harmlessly against the safe-front of japanned steel.

"Father keeps a navy revolver in the coin drawer of the vault here." called out the girl as the man in the mask pushed her deeper into the shadow of the protecting door.

At the same moment that the Laughing Mask swung about and tugged open the coin drawer, Wilson and a round-eyed footman, having heard the sound of the shot, came running to the library door. The Department, of Agricultural Economics of the Experiment Station, at Lexington, has a letter from W. T. Roark, proprietor of the Woolworth Farm, Franklin, Simpson county, Ky., announcing that the wool pooled by sheep men of Simpson county had just been sold at 39 cents straight. This is six cents above the average for Kentucky according to government figures. Several weeks ago Professor Bohannon received a letter from Mr. Roark asking for information on organizing. Upon receipt of a reply, he got to work, formed an association and pooled the crop. The wool was sold under sealed bids. Because of the limited time embraced, the move will serve as an unusual illustration of the efficiency of cooperation.
